Phillips House
407 East Franklin Street

The house was built in 1856 by Samuel Field Phillips, brother of Cornelia Phillips Spencer. Samuel Phillips graduated from the university at the head of his class in 1841 and soon became a well known lawyer. He was a firm Unionist, opposing secession. After the Civil War he became identified with the Reconstructionist arm of the Whip party and finally became a leader in the Republican Party. Under Republican Governor Holden, Phillips served in several influential government positions. His politics caused considerable dismay among his Chapel Hill friends and relatives, but he was regarded as being sincere in his beliefs and honest in his dealings. Despite political disagreements, the family ties remained close. After Samuel moved to Raleigh in 1868, his sister, Cornelia, occupied his house for a time. Samuel later moved to Washington, D.C., where he continued his law career and served as U.S. Solicitor General under President Grant, but at his own wish he was buried in Chapel Hill, which he always considered home.

The Phillips House is located just east of Franklin Street from the law office. It is a two-story building covered with plain clapboards which was built in 1856. The gable roof is trimmed with a typical Greek Revival cornice. The windows, framed by molded architraves with simple corner blocks, are unusual in that they have shallow segmental heads and are divided by thick wooden mullions, a treatment rarely found in vernacular Greek Revival buildings. All windows are fixed with green louvered blinds. A one-story veranda, added near the end of the nineteenth century and of a typical Queen Ann style, runs along the front and one side of the house, breaking out at the corner in a circular projection.
